

Richard Inskeep

Dick joined the newspaper's business department in 1949 and moved to the newsroom about 10 years later. In 1958, Dick became managing editor, a position he held for 11 years. In 1970, he became vice president and treasurer of The Journal Gazette Company, and in 1973, Dick was named publisher.

It was in this position that Dick began to truly make his mark in the industry, making policy changes which would have substantial lasting impact on the operations of the paper. Dick takes pride in the paper's courageous fight for the public's right to know. After 23 years as publisher, Dick retired and his daughter, Julie Walda, succeeded him in the position.
